

Highlights

- We test the differential impact of who is targeted with agricultural extension information within the household (husband and/or wife) and the messenger of this information (man and/or woman)
- If the aim is to empower women, most gains can be made by re-designing agricultural advisory services to target information exclusively to the female co-head within the household.
- Challenging gender stereotypes may create room for more women involvement in agriculture.